
JEFFERSON EDUCATIONAL SOCIETY

Book Notes #113

August 2022

By Jefferson Scholar-in-Residence
Dr. Andrew Roth

Watermelons!

This is going to be, much to my editors Pat Cuneo, Ben Speggen, and my wife Judy's surprise, a genuinely short Book Notes. I'm at Chautauqua Institution this week delivering a series of five lectures on the history and backstories of American Holidays for their Roads Scholars Program. It's a spin-off from my The American Tapestry Project as we continue to seek those things Americans love in common.

One of which is holidays. How many holidays do Americans celebrate? It is not a definitive number, but if I counted correctly at timeanddate.com, Americans celebrate 256 holidays! [1] They range from mega-national holidays, like Thanksgiving and Christmas, to state holidays, like Massachusetts' Patriot Day on April 19 memorializing the Battles of Lexington and Concord, to obscure holidays, like National Wear Red Day on February 4 promoting awareness of the scourge of heart disease. [2]

Holidays come in several buckets. The first two are the distinction between a holiday and an observance. A holiday is officially recognized by either the federal government, a state government, or local government and employees are given the day off. An observance is a date of some consequence, but it is not an official holiday and employees report to work. Holidays and observances come in three buckets: national, state, and local.

What month does not have a national holiday? Admittedly, this is a bit of a trick question because March and April present a conundrum. Technically neither has a national holiday, but for most Americans March 17's St. Patrick's Day has become a virtual national holiday as the "wearin' of the green" and downing a pint of stout have become American traditions. Similarly, Easter, the holiest of Christian holidays, has slipped its sectarian moorings and become, with its rabbits, chicks and eggs, and surfeit of chocolate, a celebration of spring's renewal. Since Easter can occur in either March or April, both can claim a national holiday.

No, the only month without a national holiday is August! August does boast several national observances and state holidays and observances. Among the national observances are Purple Heart Day on the 7th, National Senior Citizens Day on the 21st, and Women's Equality Day on the 26th. State holidays and observances range from Barack Obama Day on the 4th (Illinois) to Hawaii Statehood Day on the 19th to Susan B. Anthony Day on the 26th (Massachusetts). August does have several important religious observances, including Tisha B'Av (Jewish), Ashura (Muslim), Raksha Bandhan (Hindu), the Assumption of Mary (Christian, in particular Roman Catholic), and Ganesh Chaturthi (Hindu).

But it does not have an official national holiday. From my vantage point, that is a gap that needs to be closed. I have two contenders: one serious, one whimsical. Given our fractious times, I'm betting on the whimsical as the one most Americans will recognize as "a common object of their love," those things that bind a people into a nation.

First, the serious. Women's Equality Day celebrates the final triumph of the suffragists and the adoption on Aug. 26, 1920 of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution granting women the right to vote. It was first celebrated in 1971 when Congress passed U.S. Representative Bella Abzug's proposal to recognize the date as part of second wave feminism's drive to increase awareness of the importance of gender equality. It also sought to honor the pioneers of the 19th century women's rights movement and the suffragettes who had fought for women's right to full participation in American society.

I have explored this issue in multiple Book Notes, most recently in the eight-part series "The Seeds of Our Discontents," in presentations about "Freedom's Faultlines: Tales of Race and Gender" as part of my The American Tapestry Project at the Jefferson Educational Society and elsewhere, and in multiple segments of my The American Tapestry Project podcast on WQLN/NPR.

But I promised to keep this short, so we'll defer a detailed brief for the case for Women's Equality Day as a national holiday for a future Book Notes.

My whimsical candidate is Aug. 3's National Watermelon Day.

Did you miss it?

Who doesn't like watermelon? King Tut did. Watermelon seeds were found in his tomb. Watermelons have been cultivated since at least the second millennium B.C. in ancient Egypt. The first recorded watermelon harvest was in Egypt 5,000 years ago. Watermelons first appeared in Africa, then traders took it to Mediterranean countries, Europe, and other parts of the world, including China and Asia by the ninth century. The word first appeared in English in 1615 and the fruit itself comes in more than 300 varieties. [3]

Watermelon trivia: 92 percent of a watermelon is water; there are more than 1,200 varieties of the sugary fruit; 85 percent of watermelons sold today are seedless; the world's heaviest watermelon weighed in at 350.5 pounds; watermelons are Oklahoma's official state vegetable; you can eat the entire watermelon (the rind is actually full of nutrients); watermelon can help prevent cancer because it is an excellent source of the antioxidant lycopene; you can spike a watermelon by cutting a hole in it, inserting a funnel and pouring in vodka; you can create watermelon sculptures; you can have watermelon seed spitting contests, but beware! The record distance for spitting a watermelon seed is an expectoratingly incredible 75 feet by one Jason Schayot. [4]

National Watermelon Day also has its own Facebook page, which can be found here, which, among other things, features a video of the Peoria Zoo's George, a giant Aldabra tortoise, devouring a tasty melon. But National Watermelon Day's promoters have some work to do, as they sport a mere 1,010 followers of whom 1,001 "Like" the page. I wonder, did the other nine opt for cantaloupe?

Who knew?

Double "who knew?" There are also watermelon poems! At H*ll Poetry, there are pages of them, which can be found here, like one Scott Gunnion submitted in 2018:

from Watermelon Diet

It was the watermelon diet, he said
That's what killed me
A lie as ripe as the freshest rind
Listen to the man
He was there at my deathbed
Though he never cared for my diet
It was the watermelon diet
not some virus
That consigned me to the Gods ... [5]

The great Chilean poet Pablo Neruda marked his love for the venerable fruit in "Ode to the Watermelon":

from Ode to the Watermelon

... the round, magnificent,
star-filled watermelon.
It's a fruit from the thirst-tree.
It's the green whale of the summer.
The dry universe
all at once
given dark stars
by this firmament of coolness
lets the swelling
fruit
come down:
its hemispheres open
showing a flag
green, white, red,
that dissolves into

wild rivers, sugar,
delight!
Jewel box of water, phlegmatic
queen
of the fruitshops,
warehouse
of profundity, moon
on earth! [6]

One could wander and wonder for hours reading watermelon trivia. A simple Google search for “watermelon poems” gets 942,000 “hits” (which, actually, in Google-land is a small number). I promised to keep this short, and in that spirit, I offer my favorite among the tens and tens of dozens of watermelon poems.

Not only is it good, it's also short. Charles Simic's:

Watermelons

Green Buddhas
On the fruit stand.
We eat the smile
And spit out the teeth.

Remember to put it on your calendar for 2023 – Aug. 3 – National Watermelon Day: Spitting Allowed!

-- Andrew Roth, Ph.D.
Scholar-in-Residence
The Jefferson Educational Society
roth@jeserie.org

This content is copyrighted by the Jefferson 2022.

Photo Credits

“Watermelon in Ghana” at Wikicommons available here accessed August 1, 2022.
“Watermelon Garden” at Wikicommons available here accessed August 1, 2022.

End Notes

1. "Holidays and Observances in United States in 2022" at timeanddate.com available here accessed August 1, 2022.
2. Ibid.
3. These and other watermelon factoids in this Book Note are from "National Watermelon Day – August 3, 2022" at National Today available here accessed August 1, 2022.
4. Ibid.
5. Gunnion, Scott. "Watermelon Diet" at H*llo Poetry.com available here accessed August 1, 2022.
6. Neruda, Pablo. "Ode to the Watermelon" at Silver Birch Press available here accessed August 1, 2022.
7. Simic, Charles. "Watermelons" at Academy of American Poets available here accessed August 1, 2022.

Subscribe to our publications mailing list!

Subscribe to our Book Notes mailing list!

In Case You Missed It

Truth in Love | Everybody, Pick Up Your Piece of the Puzzle written by Jefferson Scholar-in-Residence Dr. Parris J. Baker

Be Well | What Happens in Vagus... written by health and wellness expert Debbie DeAngelo

Book Notes 112 | Summer Poems written by Jefferson Scholar-in-Residence Dr. Andrew Roth

'Book 'Em, Danno': A Familiar Neighborhood Face Appears on 'Hawaii Five-0' written by Jefferson Scholar-in-Residence Dr. David Frew

Justice in Sports | Scar on the Beautiful Game: Human Rights in Qatar and Beyond written by Jefferson Intern Colin Heeneman

JES Mission: The Jefferson was founded to stimulate community progress through education, research, and publications. Its mission also includes a commitment to operate in a nonpartisan, nondenominational manner without a political or philosophical bias. As such, the Jefferson intends to follow the examined truth wherever it leads and is neither liberal nor conservative, Democratic nor Republican in philosophy or action. Our writers' work reflects their own views.

Jefferson Educational Society | jeserie.org

